Multiple Sclerosis (MS) is one of the most common chronic demyelinating diseases of the central nervous system. The disease affects and relatively quickly leads to disability in mainly people 15-40 years of age. The development of MS can occur progressively or with exacerbations and remissions. The pathogenesis of the disease is based on an autoimmune process directed ...